Together for a better internet

In today's society, everything revolves around technology, so it is no wonder that we spend more and more time online. If initially the online environment appeared to keep people in close contact, we ended up not going out in private to meet new people, because everything seems simpler in the online environment. It is becoming easier for young people to get to know and have fun in the online environment because they are supposed to have their own entourage of friends. Another explanation for why many young people choose the online environment is that everything seems simpler there. You can claim absolutely anything behind the computer or the phone, there is no more case of emotions or reluctance and everyone can be whoever they want. It is much easier to accept or reject a dialogue with another person without feeling bad. It's not the same in real life.

No matter how many benefits technology brings and implicitly, the online environment, you must take into account the less pleasant part of the Internet, which is dangerous not only for children but also for adults. It is dangerous precisely because of the fact that any person on who does not know her in real life can claim absolutely anything behind the computer and can give you the impression that it is exactly what you are looking for.

The online environment cannot be dangerous unless you allow it. We will teach you what aspects you need take into consideration and not give continuity to:

1. If a person contacts you out of nowhere and makes all sorts of promises that seem to sound too good to be true and that without knowing you personally, surely something is wrong.

2. If a person sends you links or addresses of dubious sites that do not sound familiar to you, it may be viruses or "account and profile hackers". Do not accept without knowing what it is about.

3. If an unknown person you have been talking to for only a few days asks for much too personal data such as bank issues, accounts, cards, personal address and other far too personal details, he is definitely following something and it doesn't sound good.

 4. Remember that not everything you read or see on the internet is true!

5. Do not follow the urges, tasks and challenges you receive in online games that refer to real life and urge you to commit deeds that can endanger your life or affect those around you. (10-year-old A. was found unconscious in the bathroom by her five-year-old younger sister on Wednesday night. She was tied with a belt around her neck so as not to breathe as much as she could,as long as possible, while positioning the phone to record the entire moment. The "scarf game" or "blackout challenge" is a dangerous challenge in which children block their breath to faint to experience strong sensations and cause dozens of accidents each year, some "We didn't know she was participating in this game. We knew Antonella was coming to TikTok for choreography, to watch videos. But how could I imagine this atrocity? My daughter, my little A., has died because of an extreme game, on TikTok. How can I accept such a thing? "said the girl's father.)

The Italian data protection agency filed a lawsuit against TikTok in December, accusing it of "lack of attention to the protection of minors" and criticizing the ease with which very young children can enroll in the application. TikTok, which became global in 2018, has built its rapid success based on parodies and musical choreography, emphasizing the inventiveness and creativity of users who have a "free hand" in recording videos in order to go viral.

The Internet is part of our daily lives, use it responsibly!
